A permanent International conference on linguistic rights

The Italian team of the Franco-Italian LEM Project (Lingue d'Europa e del Mediterraneo), has been organizing the annual international conference, Days for Linguistic Rights, with the support of the University of Teramo and numerous other private plus institutional sponsors since 2007.

One of the main aims of this round of conferences is to bring together numerous specialists from various academic and geographic backgrounds around the theme of linguistic rights and promotion of languages: with a view to respect human rights and social development today.

The conference, of a scientific nature, has always been linked to an important literary-artistic event since 2009, The Festival of minority Literature of Europe and the Mediterranean.

Sixth edition of the Days of Linguistic Rights Migrations: Linguistic Disease & Cultural Heritage

Closing conference of the Itinerant series on “Plurilinguism and the professional world”

Call for papers

The sixth edition of the International conference, Days of Linguistic Rights, (GDL 2012) will be focused on analyzing the migration phenomenon from the point of view of socio-linguistic and cultural relations among groups that came together and thrived mainly in Italy, but not exclusively! The groups being Italian, Albanian and Francophone Belgian. At the heart of these relations, lies the historical past and present region of Abruzzo: today a land of hospitality and receiver of Albanian migration, as those who founded Villa Badessa di Rosciano in 1743; today, in recent times it has turned out to be a land of departure, with intense emigration directed towards Europe, one of the main places being Belgium.

The quality of these relations depends on the fragile dialectics involved in the concept of integration, which to a great extent is itself conditioned by languages: the scarce, imperfect or imprecise possibility of mutual comprehension among the two (or more) communities living together can in fact lead to a sort of alienation (loss of identity in favour of the dominant model) within the immigrant community and on the other hand communitarianism (exasperation often forced by ones identity features as a self-defence reaction). Naturally, the problem of comprehension among groups is not strictly a linguistic problem, but has more to do with cultural, social and symbolic aspects upon which collective and subjective identity are built.

Starting from these simple considerations, one initial aim of the 2012 GDL- which ends the cycle of DORIF conferences, on the relation between “Plurilinguism and the Professional world” <http://www.dorif.it/convegni.php>, that began in Teramo itself in spring 2011,– will be to make a point about the theories, best practices and the professional elements regarding the field of inter-comprehension and dialogue between cultures in contact, with the participation of linguists, but also sociologists, cultural mediators, legal experts, institutional actors etc.

There is a need to develop an analysis within this structure, also in a historic-diachronic manner: the immigration/emigrations caused by conflicts of the past have in many cases transformed into fortunes, both, because of the improvement in the material conditions of human lives and entire communities and due to the birth of precious linguistic pockets. In fact today, often, these are not just extraordinary pockets of cultural diversity, but real treasure chests that conserve through time, material and immaterial cultural heritage that has been lost, destroyed or however transformed in the “motherland.” It will be useful from this point of view – and strategic – to detect the forms, techniques and technology to reactivate the spread of social, cultural – but also economic and entrepreneurial – communication between the “motherland” and “ex-colonies.”

Not an «inert mass» (Saussure) but «place of conflict» (Lafont): society, societies have always been swept across by linguistic-cultural contact phenomena and in this meeting/clash the subject and society itself can obtain different opportunities of growth. However it is important to question oneself thoroughly about the correct path and the correct manner of walking it.

Research Macro-topics

Based on these observations, the communication proposals at the GDL 2012 will have to be on the following macroscopic areas, each one coordinated by a specific scientific committee. Below we underline the more specific themes, set out in a series of more precise and non-exhaustive themes and related scientific committees- the composition of which are still to be perfected.
